About

Hannah Kennedy is an English singer-songwriter, violinist and producer creating intimate, cinematic indie music about love, loss, growing up and the beauty found in imperfection. Blending understated vocals, piano, strings and layered harmonies, her music draws influence from artists including Lana Del Rey, Laufey, Weyes Blood and Holly Humberstone.

A classically trained violinist and lifelong musician, Hannah writes, records and produces her own music, bringing together her background in classical performance with a modern singer-songwriter sound. Her work is rooted in emotional storytelling, delicate arrangements and a distinctly cinematic visual world.

Based in the UK, Hannah is currently developing her artist project through a consistent release schedule, live performance and visual storytelling, building towards a career as a full-time independent artist.

The Beauty of Things Falling Apart - EP

4 September 2026

The Beauty of Things Falling Apart is a seven-track EP exploring themes of love, loss, change and acceptance. Across the project, Hannah reflects on the endings and transformations that shape us, finding beauty in the moments when relationships, memories and versions of ourselves begin to change.

Self-produced by Hannah, the EP blends mellow, intimate vocals with lush string arrangements, twinkling synthesisers and understated piano-led production. The result is a warm, cinematic soundscape that allows the songwriting and emotional storytelling to remain at the centre.

Rather than viewing endings solely through the lens of heartbreak, The Beauty of Things Falling Apart explores the possibility of finding meaning in what remains. It is a project about learning to let go without diminishing what something once meant, and accepting that falling apart can sometimes be part of becoming something new.
